A. Introduction

Psycholinguistics is the study of the mental aspect of language and speech. It's primarily concerned with the ways in which language is represented and processed in the brain. Psycholinguistics explores the relationship between the human mind and language. It treats the language user as an individual rather than a representative of society—but an individual whose linguistics performance is determined by the strengths and limitations of the mental apparatus which we all share.

Morphophonemic is the study of the relationship between morphology and phonology. Morphophonemics deals with the variation in the forms of morphemes because of phonetic factor. In the morphpnemics there is a type one of them is addition, addition have three type there are: prothesis, epenthesis, and paragoge.

In this research will be focused on the paragoge. Paragoge is one of typological name that often occurs in linguistics. Paragoge is part of addition or insertion that is included in morphophonemics which is also relates to psycholinguistics. The word comes from Greek para, which means beyond, and goge, which means carrying.
